Mathematics for Students With Learning Disabilities Symposium

This two-day symposium will look at how to support students with learning disabilities in mathematics. On day one, participants will learn about neurodiversity and how Universal Design for Learning supports all students with Dr. Rachel Lambert, a leading researcher in her field of special education and mathematics. On day two, participants will experience different instructional routines to support all learners in mathematics, including students with learning disabilities with Grace Kelemanik and Amy Lucenta, authors of the book, Routines for Reasoning: Fostering the Mathematical Practices in All Students.
