

What Really Works With Exceptional Learners

Today's teachers, especially the many who work with students with special needs, are pressed to know a little something about everything. Expertise is needed in different content and pedagogical areas, but knowledge of different types of disabilities is needed as well. What Really Works With Exceptional Learners is full of evidence-based practices to empower any educator. This training will help examine how special educational needs affect content areas like reading and math, specialization areas like autism and learning disabilities, pedagogical areas like culturally responsive practices and accommodations and other critical areas like legal issues, behavior challenges, and home-school collaboration.
