Presenter

Dr. Martha S. Burns has been a practicing speech-language pathologist in the Chicago area for over 40 years. She serves on the Faculty of Northwestern University, in the area of behavioral and cognitive neuroscience. Dr. Burns is a Fellow of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association and has received honors from Northwestern University, other universities, hospitals, and professional organizations. She has authored 3 books and over 100 book chapters and articles. Dr. Burns consults with many school districts around the world. She presents 75-100 invited in-services, keynotes, webinars, and continuing education courses world-wide each year on neuroscience applications to education and clinical practice.

Course Overview

This course will cover the newest research on how therapy drives neuroplastic change, especially after brain injury. The course will distinguish between what is understood about natural and therapeutically driven recovery processes. Research on the effects of therapy on speech, language, and cognition will be emphasized.

Upon completion of this course, participants will be able to:

- Utilize new brain plasticity research to recognize how therapy changes the human brain
- Utilize the new research for timing of treatment to coincide with natural recovery processes
- Apply the new research for Speech/Language goal setting
- Apply the new research on treatment intensity and frequency to select adjunctive evidence-based technological interventions
